In the Synthetic dataset, the adaptive threshold ($\sigma$) for each window is fundamentally stable despite being influenced by the type and frequency of data drift, with GM_Grad showing a higher threshold due to more frequent and significant drift occurrences, and initial windows proving ineffective for drift detection, suggesting the utility of pre-training with existing data.